

If I was a closet, what would those stories inside of me be?

Over the period of collection of data, it was quite edivent that laughter is something that captures the essense of who I am as a person quite aptly. Using this analogy to show what laughter is to me, I have literally translated each laughter of mine, over the course of three days into a mini garment/piece of fabric (cut out bits of paper), and hung them on a miniature hanger. I have categorised my laughter into 12 different categories - such as giggles, snorty-laughters, laughter that lasts longer than 10 seconds, boisterous laughter - and so on and so forth. Also, the colour of the hanger determines who I was laughing with. The proper legend to understand these will be uploaded on blackboard.
